In the English language there is a good proverb: „A bird may be known by its song”. I suppose that it means that you can know the person better when you look at his actions. Only in ~~that~~ this way you can judge whether he has good or bad personal qualities. I'll try to illustrate my reasons, using my ~~personal~~ experience and background knowledge.

Firstly, this proverb can be often used while analyzing books. As an example we can look at „The hero of our times” written by M. Lermontov. Let's look closer at the main character of this composition, Gregory Pechorin. Although, as it was written in the book, he seemed to be an attractive young man, this first impression was false. We can see the proofs of that if we look closer at his actions: he tricked Mary only in order to have fun, killed Grushnitsky for the same reason, and there were some other actions that the most of people would consider as bad deeds. So we can say that Pechorin is a selfish person if we look at what he has done.

Secondly, this proverb is used in our every day life. For example, we can say that a person is kind if he does something that is good not only for him but for others too. So we can consider saving people, who needs it, ~~taking care of the sick~~, helping wounded animals and some other actions as good deeds. If the person does these good deeds, we can say that he is kind.

In conclusion I'd like to say that it's really important to judge the person not by his appearance but by his personal qualities in order to make ~~our~~ society better. There is another English proverb with the same meaning: „Actions speak louder than words”. If there are several proverbs with the same meaning, it means that it's very important for humanity.

To start off, I think the meaning behind the proverb "A bird may be known by its song" is that, similar to birds and their singing, people and their characters can be identified by their vocabulary and their attitudes. So, it's safe to say that speech is one of the most important characteristics of a person, which reveals the owner's true identity.

This idea can be seen in ^{our} daily life. For instance, when I got into 10th grade, in another school, I saw many new people and faces. I tried to talk to as many people as I could to get to know them. The first impression ~~often~~ came from their "song" - how they spoke. Some people had a "song" that was rude, impatient, using a negative tone or nagging ^{much} ~~a lot~~. As the first school year went by, I saw that my first impression was right. Many of these people were described with negative adjectives, got into trouble with teachers, and had a bad reputation. Conversely, the people who were very open and friendly in their speech, their "song" was positive, still greet me, and we have chit-chats during breaks. Many from this group actively participate in school life and have a great reputation among teachers.

So, I believe you can't fully judge a book by its cover, but if you listen to its song by paying attention to a person's words and tone. Usually, you get a very accurate idea of who they are. If their "song" is monotonous and they seem bored when they are talking to you, then they probably aren't worth your time. In the end, a person's true identity can be known by their song.
